Survey Methodology

The Millennials, Sexuality and Reproductive Health Survey was conducted by Public Religion Research Institute among a random sample of 2,314 adults between the ages of 18 and 35 who are part of the GfK's KnowledgePanel. Interviews were conducted online in both English and Spanish between February 12 and February 25, 2015. The base sample of 1,323 respondents was augmented by oversamples of African Americans (N=261), Hispanics (N=608) and Asian-Pacific Islanders (N=122). The survey was made possible by a generous grant from the Ford Foundation.

The initial sample drawn from the KnowledgePanel was adjusted using pre-stratification weights so that it approximates the overall population (18 to 35 year olds) in the U.S. Once assigned to the survey KnowledgePanel participants receive an email notification alerting them that the survey is available for them to take. After three days an automatic email reminder is sent to the panel participant followed by an automated telephone call three or four days later.

The KnowledgePanel is a nationally representative probability sample of the U.S. adult population. Panelists are recruited by randomly selecting residential addresses using a process called address-based sampling (ABS). Since roughly 20 percent of U.S. households do not have home Internet access, respondent households who do not have Internet access or own a computer are provided Internet service and a netbook computer to ensure that panel respondents are representative of the U.S. adult population. Unlike opt-in panels, households are not permitted to "self-select" into KnowledgePanel; and are generally limited to how many surveys they can take within a given time period. Additional details about the KnowledgePanel can be found on the GfK website:

<http://www.gfk.com/us/Solutions/consumer-panels/Pages/GfK-KnowledgePanel.aspx>

To reduce the effects of any non-response bias, a post-stratification adjustment was applied based on demographic distributions from the March 2014 Current Population Survey (CPS). Weighting was accomplished using a two-stage process. First, within four racial and ethnic groups—white, black, Hispanic and Asian-Pacific Islander—each sample was balanced using the following characteristics: age, gender, region (U.S. Census), metro area, education and income. In the second stage, the overall sample demographics were balanced to match target population parameters for race and ethnicity, Hispanic origin (Non-Hispanic, Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, other Hispanic), primary language, and Internet access.

The sample weighting was accomplished using an iterative proportional fitting (IFP) process that simultaneously balances the distributions of all variables. Weights were trimmed to prevent individual interviews from having too much influence on the final results. The use of these weights in statistical analysis ensures that the demographic characteristics of the sample closely approximate the demographic characteristics of the target populations.

The margin of error for the overall survey is +/- 2.7 percentage points at the 95% level of confidence. The design effect for the survey is 1.8. For a full list of sample sizes for racial and ethnic subgroups see Table 1. In addition to sampling error, surveys may also be subject to error or bias due to question wording, context and order effects.
